Third Harmonic Generation: Malaria Infection Detection

J. Bélisle and his colleagues used Third Harmonic Generation imaging of a pigment that is deposited in blood cells by the Malaria parasite. The detected signal in the blood cells is highly specific and therefore allows a sensitive and rapid detection of early stages of infection of blood cells with the possibility of automated optical detection.

Biophys. J. 94, L26-L28